

About your purchase from Upper Cervical Illustrations

Thank you for your purchase. These 24" x 36" illustrations are ideal for framing and hanging in your office. Popular uses are as patient education pieces in the waiting room, recovery room, or as visual reference during your report of findings patient discussions. Each illustration helps patients understand the benefits of head and neck alignment, and the importance of maintaining body balance.

These are made specifically for you, the Upper Cervical Chiropractor

Help us protect these images

Each image we offer to UC doctors, is copyrighted and protected under intellectual property laws here in the US and abroad. Please do not share these illustrations. Creating unauthorized copies in print or electronically, changing/removing labels, making modifications or separating images to use elsewhere is not allowed.

How to use your purchased illustrations legally (on the web or in marketing materials)

Your purchase does not grant you electronic use of these images. If you want to use images of the illustrations you have purchased for your website or in marketing materials, first request permission in writing (via email) by requesting our 'Request to Use Copyright Material' agreement for images you have purchased from us. Note, only images you have purchased are eligible, and we do not authorize use of any images from our brochures and booklets. In addition, we do not authorize use of our images on Facebook or Instagram (as they can be easily pirated).

Upon return of the signed agreement, we send a high-resolution PDF image to you by email attachment. There is NO charge for this electronic copy. Then you can legally use the imagery as is, without any modification, and with copyright statements in place on your business website and in your marketing materials.

We're glad to count you among our family of Upper Cervical doctors!

Want to know more about Copyright Infringement?

It is a widely held misconception that works on the internet are not covered by copyright and thus can be used freely. This is not true. Copyright law applies to online material just as it does to offline materials, thus, if you use someone else's work as the basis for derivate work of your own, you are liable for what is called "copyright infringement." Basically, copyright infringement exists if you exercise one or more of the exclusive rights held by a copyright owner. A copyright owner enjoys the following rights:

- to reproduce the work in copies
- to prepare derivate works based upon the work
- to distribute copies of the work in public
- to perform the work
- to display the copyrighted work, and in the case of sound recordings,
- to perform the work publicly by means of digital audio transmission
